Captain Pantoja and the Special Service is a relatively short comedic novel by acclaimed Peruvian writer Mario Vargas Llosa. The story takes place in the Peruvian department of Amazonas, where troops from the Peruvian Army are attended to by prostitutes, referred to euphemistically in the Spanish term visitadora, meaning "visitor" and in juridical terms it means "auditor", "inspector" or "examiner". According to the author himself, the work is based on facts, as he was able to verify ...

Captain Pantoja's Special Service is a brothel for the Peruvian army in the Amazonian basin. The book is a mixture of satire and slapstick comedy, but not really even close to the writing quality on The Time of the Hero, The Green House or Conversation in the Cathedral that preceded it or Aunt Julia and The War at the End of the World which succeeded it.

The really sweet thing about Captain Pantoja is the unexpected feeling of lightness that comes into it, the sense of things genuinely getting better in some capacity, and Pantoja himself is the primary vessel of that lightness. What del Solar manages to do quite well in this portion of the movie is to indicate a burgeoning feeling of relaxation, of pride, of not-being-such-a-square-ness.
